Weekly Meal Plan for Busy Families: 7 Dinners and One Shopping List

By the Trillion Man Outreach kitchen crew Updated October 8, 2026

A meal plan does not have to be a color-coded spreadsheet. It just has to answer one question before 5 p.m.: what are we eating? Here is a ready-made week matched to how tired you will probably be each day, a combined shopping list and the 10-minute method for making your own.

The 10-minute planning method

Check the calendar. Practice night and late-meeting night get the easiest dinners.

Pick one slow cooker or dump-and-bake night for your busiest day.

Choose two no-brainer nights, like quesadillas or breakfast for dinner.

Check the pantry and freezer before writing the list.

Post the plan where everyone can see it so the nightly "what do you want?" debate ends.

A sample week

Monday: Slow cooker salsa chicken with rice and tortillas. Start it in the morning. Make extra.

Tuesday: Chicken quesadillas
using Monday's leftovers. About 15 minutes.

Wednesday: Sheet-pan sausage and broccoli.
One pan, foil lined.

Thursday: Pantry pasta with white beans and spinach.
A 20-minute pot meal.

Friday: Breakfast for dinner.
Scrambled eggs, toast and fruit.

Saturday: Egg fried rice
with leftover rice and frozen vegetables.

Sunday: Quick chicken soup
from the last of the chicken, broth and frozen vegetables.

Recipes for most of these are on our

Combined shopping list

Protein and dairy:
2 lb chicken breasts, 1 package cooked sausage, 1 dozen eggs, shredded cheese, parmesan, butter.

Produce and frozen:
broccoli, baby potatoes, frozen peas and carrots, frozen spinach, fruit, onions.

Pantry:
salsa, taco seasoning, black beans, white beans, marinara, pasta, rice, tortillas, broth, soy sauce, oil, bread.

Check what you already own first. A fifth jar of cumin is not a plan.

Plan for energy, not ambition

Put the easiest dinners on your worst days. If the week falls apart, swap two nights without guilt. For ideas, see
